

Free office space for ex-Lehman staff

Former staff of the investment bank Lehman Brothers are being offered free office space if they are planning to set up in business on their own.

Serviced office provider, Business Environment, with centres across London and the South East, is behind the pledge.

"We know from experience that following redundancy many people utilise their skills by starting their own business and we are keen to help as many as possible of those that lost their jobs to take those first important steps towards going it alone," said David Saul, BE's managing director.